Col. Higginson's Story—Author's Status in England.

"Many years ago a young American girl, whom I knew, found herself in London as the guest of a relative, who was the wife of an Ambassador to England from a Southern State, and a person of great social standing and influence. This young lady, only 17 years of age, was, in a way, to enter upon a career that would make her the most exclusive society. You can imagine how she enjoyed it. What American girl would not like to go to England at 17 and find herself among the honored, dining with lords and ladies, with princes and princesses, observing all these royal and noble creatures close at hand, and even at feeding time, which is always the most interesting period in any menagerie.

"This young girl enjoyed it enormously. At the first of these entertainments to which she went she found herself shrinking in a humble corner, looking around her to try to decide who were the most distinguished of the most high-born of those she saw. Most of them looked to her rather commonplace, very much like other well-bred gentlemen and ladies. But her eye fell on one very distinguished looking old man in the opposite corner, who seemed to her a person who might be worthy of any social position; not handsome, rather ugly than otherwise, but keenly intellectual; and in every way distinguished. She was resolved to fix her eyes upon him and find out who he was.

"After a while the summons was given to the dinner table—they were summoned to the dining-hall in that complicated and elaborate order of precedence which you will find at the end of the English books on etiquette. It is a very complicated order of precedence, and this young girl saw every striding lordship and every young dame, the echo of an honorable house, pass her by, and she watched from her corner. Still they went, two and two and two and two, like Noah's most ancient families on a similar occasion. And still she watched for her distinguished-looking old man in the opposite corner, until the last of all, at the very end of that brilliant procession, was a lady, only two unadorned pieces in the room, that young American girl and that distinguished-looking old man, who turned out to be Samuel Rogers, the distinguished poet of those days and the recognized head of literary society in London.

"My young friend said that she got two things at that entertainment—the one got the most delightful companion she ever had at a dinner party, and she got a lesson in the utterance of lowliness and of mere hereditary rank that would last a lifetime. Samuel Rogers's poems are not read so much now as formerly, but at that time the highest literary honor a man could have was to dine with Rogers. He was one of the richest bankers in London, and was probably or possibly the only person in the room who had won for himself a reputation outside of his own little island; but he was next to nobody in that company, and the little American girl was the nobody."

OXYGEN IN MEDICINE.—Oxygen has been administered by a British physician, Dr. Aubrey Blakiston, in three unusually severe cases of pneumonia, and one of acute bronchitis. No case was fatal, and he believes that at least two of the lives were saved by the oxygen. He has tried oxygen in three cases of asthma, giving through an inhaler at the commencement of an attack with the result that the inspiration almost immediately became longer and the patient less distressed, while in two of the cases the paroxysm was cut short by a few inhalations. Convalescences, also, were benefited by oxygen, especially when used in connection with massage. Dr. Blakiston concludes that oxygen is a remedy of great therapeutic value, not solely confined to the treatment of diseases of the respiratory organs, and that in combination with electricity and massage its use must prove, to the convalescent and debilitated constitution, one of the best substitutes for change, exercise, and sea air.

Great preparations are being made throughout the Catholic world for the celebration of the Pope's episcopal jubilee next year, and at the Vatican extraordinary importance is being given to it. There are three hundred committees in different parts of Christendom collecting donations. From reports received it is believed that the presents on this occasion will equal those made on the occasion of the Pope's priestly jubilee, in 1888, when they amounted to upward of $5,000,000 in cash and $20,000,000 in other presents.
